THE CORPS ACHIEVES ACS ACCREDITATION IN SCOTLAND

The Corps has been awarded SIA Approved Contractor Status in Scotland. The accreditation was confirmed on 6th December 2007 following an independent audit of the Scottish team and reinforces The Corps' reputation as a leading international supplier of security services.

The Corps was one of the first companies to reach ACS standard when the scheme was initially introduced for England and Wales in March 2005. This recent achievement brings The Corps in Scotland in line with the rest of The Corps teams with ACS accreditation across mainland UK.

Richard Moule – The Corps' CEO commented: "I am delighted The Corps has achieved ACS status in Scotland, especially so early into the licensing process. This is a great example of the dedication and hard work that has gone into making The Corps one of the leading security companies in the UK."

In February 2007, The Corps opened a brand new state-of-the-art monitoring centre in Glasgow, representing significant investment into the region and demonstrating The Corps' commitment to being at the forefront of technology and innovation in the security services market.

Notes to Editors

The security licensing laws, which were launched in March 2005, were introduced as part of the Private Security Industry Act 2001 which was designed to regulate the industry. In addition to these licensing requirements the SIA set up an Approved Contractor Scheme to reward those companies who were able to conform to the stringent licensing regulation.

About The Corps
