THE CORPS MONITORING CENTRE ACHIEVES COVETED NSI GOLD AWARD

Congratulations to the Corps Monitoring Centre team who have achieved the NSI Gold award. The scope of approval is Remote Video Response Centre (RVRC) monitoring detector activated CCTV systems and other CCTV systems used in security applications.

The CMC one of only 20 centres in the UK accredited by the NSI to this standard. Bill McGregor, John Sives, Andy Stevenson and a host of other Corps employees have been working with the NSI to ensure that the facility gained the coveted accreditation.

The award is only granted to companies which have achieved NSI gold approval, the premier scheme for companies involved in the installation and maintenance of Intruder Alarms, CCTV and Access control systems in the UK. It involves the stringent audit of process and equipment and offers further assurance to The Corps customers of our commitment to the highest standard of service and security.

The Corps has had a monitoring solution for over seven years, but in 2007 invested in the new facility to extend the range of services offered. The new Corps Monitoring Centre provides detector activated CCTV monitoring, access control and live surveillance 24 hours a day, 365 days a year to customers in the UK.

Richard Moule, CEO of The Corps, comments: "We are delighted to have achieved the NSI Gold award. It is the culmination of the efforts of The Corps team, and recognises our commitment to delivering the highest quality security solutions in our market. The Corps Monitoring Centre represents the cutting edge in monitoring and alarm response capabilities and enables us to offer our customers access to what is considered the premier facility in the UK."
